Hi Torch-of-Truth,
Your question has been posted to the Gmail Community.

Most questions receive a reply within 24 hours. We'll send you an email notification when this happens.

I am experiencing serious issues with my Gmail account involving email delivery suppression, blocked communications, and unexplained access restrictions. Several messages—particularly legal complaints and federal submissions—have either failed to send, gone missing, or been stripped of headers/body content before delivery. These problems persist across devices and networks.

In some cases, recipients never receive emails, or I receive Delivery Status Notification (Failure) responses citing vague or misleading error codes (e.g., 550-5.4.1 "Access Denied").

I've also had mail headers altered or removed entirely, making verification or traceability impossible.

This is more than a technical issue.

It is intentionally and actively interfering with my ability to exercise civil rights, pursue justice, and ensure safety for myself and my child.

I need confirmation:

- Is Google filtering or blocking my emails based on content or recipient?
- Are specific servers or accounts subject to internal flags or routing suppression?
- Is there a transparent review process for identifying intentional message tampering?

I have detailed logs, headers, and timestamps, and I'm seeking immediate escalation.

This is a federal-level concern, and I need transparency from Google.

If anyone has experienced similar issues or can direct me to the appropriate internal oversight or legal escalation process within Google, I would be grateful.

I've been having a serious issue where Gmail is rejecting or bouncing back emails that I'm trying to send to public agencies, media, and regulators (like the FTC, DOJ, and consumer reporters). Sometimes the bounce messages say the email address is invalid even when it's confirmed valid.

In one recent rejection, the returned message included a file called:
`noname (4K)`
I have no idea where that attachment came from—it wasn't part of the message I sent. It also doesn't match any of my usual formatting or attachments. This is deeply concerning as I'm currently involved in serious legal, disability, and civil rights matters.

I need guidance and immediate escalation here as these issues are interfering with federal communications involved in federal litigation and are being tampered with.....

As one more example...

Suspicious Routing Header – "rsccd.edu" in LG&E Delivery Failure
Additionally, in one of the bounced emails I sent to Louisville Gas & Electric (LG&E), the delivery failure notice included an unexpected header referencing rsccd.edu, a California community college domain completely unrelated to me or the utility. I have never been affiliated with this organization, and no such routing should appear in correspondence intended for LG&E.

- This domain appeared only in the email header of the bounce notice, not in my original message.
- There are no forwarding or third-party routing rules set on my Gmail account.
- I have documented this in a notarized affidavit due to the pattern of interference and the sensitive legal nature of the communications involved.

To my knowledge, this could indicate unauthorized relaying, header injection, or mail path tampering. I would like to understand how such an unrelated academic domain became embedded in a Gmail-to-utility message failure — and whether others have experienced similar behavior.

Thank you,

John R. Fouts, MBA
